Professor Piet Bracke (Ghent University)

Abstract

This participatory workshop given by Professor Piet Bracke aims to discuss the issues of the combination between life course (or life span) perspective and health based on the participants' work. This general theme includes theoretical, empirical and methodological research aspects. This workshop is open to PhD Students and PostDocs who are directly studying health but also to those who are working more indirectly on these questions. This workshop will be also an opportunity to address more general scientific research issues.

In detail, Piet Bracke will introduce this workshop with a first presentation. Then, each participant will present an aspect of her or his work (paper, chapter or research questions for the less advanced PhD students). Piet Bracke and the other participants will discuss each presentation. In addition to the inputs offered by the presence of an expert in health sociology, another strength of this workshop lies in the interaction between the participants. The last afternoon will consist in a synthesis of the inputs and exchanges and a more general discussion about scientific research issues (methods, social and political implications, etc.).
